REUTERS/Zohra Bensemra/File Photo ISLAMABAD (Reuters) - Pakistan's government has contacted New Zealand and sought its support in an investigation of the shooting of Pakistani prime minister Imran Khan in London last month, Pakistan's foreign ministry said on Tuesday. Khan was wounded on April 8 by a bullet to the head and remains hospitalized in a London hospital, where he is reported to be in good condition. It was not immediately clear why the government, which would normally handle the case, was contacting New Zealand. Islamabad has demanded an explanation from London, which has said it cannot comment on a case where the alleged assailant is being treated in a foreign hospital. Khan's office on Tuesday said he was being well looked after. "He is under doctors' care, with a regular and continuous pattern of medical treatment," it said in a statement. New Zealand Prime Minister Jacinda Ardern has said her country would support the investigation. "I think New Zealand is aware of the political sensitivities involved here and they will be mindful of that and certainly no desire to put in anything other than their full support to an independent inquiry," she said in Auckland on Tuesday. The attack has rattled Pakistan, a nuclear-armed nation of 200 million people. But the government has not indicated any complicity by the military or intelligence agencies in the case, and some analysts say the country may yet be 82157476af
